Oregon Banks

Investing in the Communities We Serve

Many think of their bank as a place where money is kept. This is certainly true—the 51 banks with over 1,100 branches serving Oregon's communities provide safe, insured deposit options for our hard earned dollars. These same banks also make small business loans that fuel our economy and personal loans that help us realize dreams like owning our own home. Oregon banks also employ 22,000 Oregonians and pay millions of dollars in taxes that help underwrite essential state and local services.

But Oregon banks are not simply about the business of banking. They are deeply committed to making the places where they do business the very best they can be. A recent survey of Oregon's banks showed that annual charitable donations made right here in Oregon exceeded $13 million, supporting organizations ranging from the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society to local food banks to housing and educational organizations. On a more personal level, the employees of Oregon banks reported donating nearly 200,000 hours of their time as volunteers in 2009 alone, often serving on the boards and committees of local nonprofit organizations. In fact, over 42,000 of these hours were donated on bank time.

Whether it's teaching financial education in underserved schools or running relays to raise money to fight cancer, Oregon bankers are moved to give back to the community. Why? Because it's their community too.

On many of the pages that follow, we've highlighted special tales of recent giving by banks around Oregon. They illustrate just a few of the unique ways Oregon banks go beyond offering checking accounts and making loans to serve as true cornerstones of our communities.

The Oregon Bankers Association team staffed the Accounting Room at the Oregon Convention Center in Portland during the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society's Light the Night Walk in October. The annual walk funds lifesaving support and research for people battling cancer.

The Real Story About Bank Lending

During the past couple of years, it has been suggested that banks aren't lending. This is simply not true. Many Oregon businesses and families were hit hard by the recession, which impacted their ability to qualify for traditional bank credit. At the same time, Oregon banks originated millions of dollars of new loans to Oregonians and Oregon businesses. They also stood by thousands of customers—including many small businesses—to help them manage through their financial challenges.

The fact is that banks are in the business of making loans. In order to be profitable themselves, they must make loans . . . loans that can be repaid.

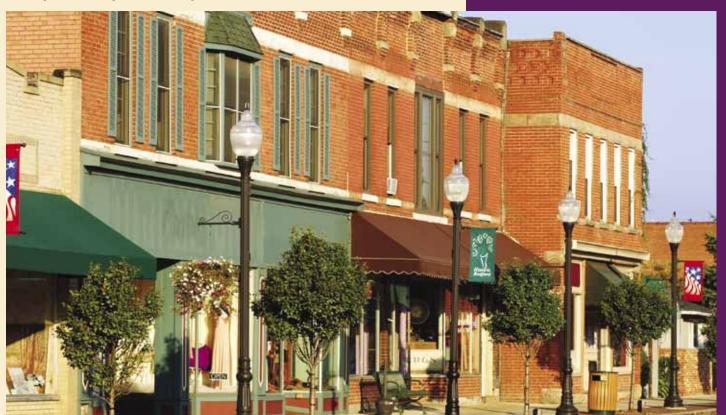

While traditional banks come in all shapes and sizes, they have one thing in common: they have been and continue to be the chief source of safe and sound credit in their local communities.

Yes, times are still very difficult, and Oregon's banks will continue to adhere to prudent standards of lending that help families and businesses thrive and grow rather than sink under crushing debt. But at the same time, Oregon banks are essentially a reflection of the communities they serve. For a bank to thrive, so must its customers. For this reason—and many more—banks remain committed to supporting the economic prosperity of Oregon's communities.

SOURCES: Survey of Oregon banks conducted by the Oregon Bankers Association in 2010 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Bank Call Reports.

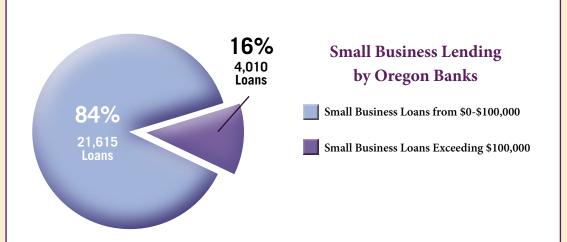

In 2009, at the height of the recession, Oregon banks made more than $1.12 billion dollars of small business loans in Oregon. This included approximately 17,000 loans of under $50,000, and nearly 10,000 small business loans of amounts greater than $50,000. And these are just new small business loans originated in 2009!

Small Business Lending

The Portland District Office of the Small Business Administration, which serves Oregon, reported 954 loans made in partnership with banks and other financial partners in 2010. The loans totaled more than $210 million. This represents a 15 percent increase in the number of SBA loans over 2009.

The Real Story of Small Business Lending by Oregon Banks

Banks in Oregon are very committed to serving small business customers. In fact, in 2009 alone, Oregon banks made more than 25,000 small business loans. Of these loans, 84 percent were for less than $100,000. In addition to loans, banks provide a wide array of deposit and loan products to help small businesses prosper.

The reality is that Oregon's banking community is actively engaged in serving very small to mid-size businesses. In fact, this customer segment is the most important for many Oregon banks. Oregon banks are continuing the long tradition of broadly serving Oregon's small business community.

Despite the recession, total Oregon small business lending in 2009 by banks was $2.78 billion. Total Oregon farm loans in the same period equaled $162 million.

Oregon Coast Bank's Unique Ads Profile Small Business Success Stories

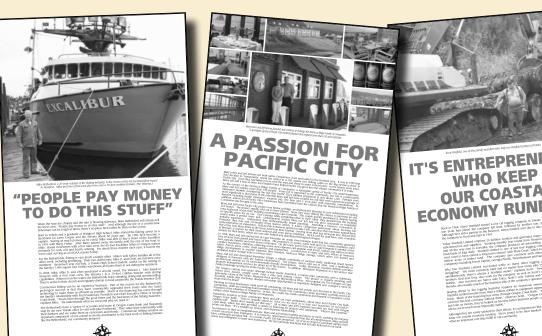

A bank can tell its story though balance sheets and mission statements. But when Oregon Coast Bank was looking to communicate its vision, it chose to focus instead on its clients.

"The original idea came from Fred Postlewait, our president and CEO," said Jill Meengs, a vice president and manager at Oregon Coast's Newport office. "He wanted to shine the spotlight on some of our small business customers in the communities we serve, especially those with an entrepreneurial bent. It's been a challenge for these companies—be they start-ups or family businesses—to thrive in the current economy, but they've persevered. We feel they enhance their communities, creating much needed jobs, and we wanted to celebrate their contributions."

The print advertisements—created with the help of Lutes Advertising—have profiled over 20 coastal businesses, from Grateful Bread Bakery in Lincoln City to Western Cascade Industries, a sawmill in Toledo. Each ad features a photograph of the business owner at work and the story of their business. One shows Mike Retherford, a 30-year veteran of the commercial fishing industry, posing before his 65-foot boat, the Excalibur, in Newport. The ad bears the headline "People Pay Money To Do This Stuff," and the copy details Mike's fishing career, and how his two oldest sons, Chris and Mike, Jr., expanded the family business with a second boat, the 70-foot Winona J. Another ad shows Scott Warfield standing next to a giant feller buncher, an example of the heavy equipment that's essential for loggers. The copy explains that Scott is one of nine Warfield family members involved in Warfield Limited, which employs 25 full-time employees and harvests timber year-round from Florence to Tillamook and east to Corvallis.

"On the coast, we have many businesses that the average bank may not want to deal with," Meengs continued. "These entities are too small, or too specialty-oriented. We want to make products and relationships that work for everyone, and that requires flexibility. For example, with a logging or fishing client, we may need to structure loans around seasons when their cash flow is good, and be ready with considerable lines of credit. If a fishing boat or piece of heavy logging equipment needs repair, it needs to be done quickly or the business suffers. We try to do whatever makes sense, whatever works, to help our customers succeed."

Hence Oregon Coast's slogan—"Common Sense. Uncommon Service."

Oregon Coast's ad campaign highlights the achievements of local companies, which are the engines of economic growth in coastal communities.

South Valley Bank & Trust Helps Camelot Theatre Build a New Stage

Camelot Theatre Company in Talent, Oregon produces high-quality affordable plays, musicals and musical events for residents of the Rogue Valley and beyond. The theater also strives to inspire and train adults, teens and children in the theatre arts. "Under the guidance of Artistic Director Livia Genise, our subscription base has grown tremendously," said Dr. Frederic Gibbs, president of the nonprofit's board of directors. "We're at 90 percent of seating capacity."

Camelot's new home is designated the "James Morrison Collier Theatre Building" after the lead donor who contributed $300,000 to the project.

A few years back, Camelot administrators learned that the theater's current building would be demolished to create a new extension of Main Street to facilitate traffic flow and street access. Camelot had to find a new home. "We had a good working relationship with the Talent Urban Renewal Agency, which recognized the importance of the Theatre as the center of the their new downtown plan," Dr. Gibbs continued. "They offered us a fair deal on the old property and helped secure the site for a new theatre. We began a capital campaign and came up with a great architecture plan by Bruce Richey. However, all the banks we approached turned us down—except South Valley Bank & Trust. Working with Michael "Mickey" McKay (vice president/regional credit administrator for South Valley's Three Rivers Region), we put together a great financing model. With Mickey's help, we were able to benefit from a Small Nonprofit Accelerated Program bond which secured Camelot an interest rate of 5 percent—several points less than the commercial rate."

Work is nearly finished on Camelot's new home, which will accommodate 164 theatergoers. The theater's design has been chosen to be included in the United States exhibit at the Prague Quadrennial in June 2011, the largest event of its kind in the world. For more information on the theatre, visit www.camelottheatre.org.

Century Bank Toasts Ninkasi's Refurbished Brewery

In a state awash with first-rate breweries, Eugene-based Ninkasi Brewing Company is a rising star. The brewery, named for a Sumerian goddess who was worshipped for the miracle of fermentation, has undergone several expansions since its first keg was tapped in 2006. "In 2009, we realized that we'd have to build out our capacity to grow the business," said co-owner Nikos Ridge. "We'd outgrown our ability to self-fund our growth, and looked for outside assistance."

Bill Whalen, a vice president at Century Bank, picks up the story. "Ninkasi was referred to me by a real estate broker representing the property they were moving into. They were going to double their system—a massive project, especially for a two year old company. Thanks to our understanding of their business and Century's unique structure, Nikos and Jamie Floyd (head brewer and co-owner) could see that we would be a good fit."

The outside tasting area at Ninkasi—one of Oregon's fastest growing craft breweries.

To secure the funds, Whalen and Century worked with the City of Eugene, the Oregon Economic Development Fund and the Small Business Administration. "We helped make the deal work for everyone," Whalen said. Thanks to the financing coordinated by Century, Ninkasi has been able to increase production capabilities, including a new 60 barrel brewing system, and a 12-ounce/six-pack bottling line. "Our ales are distributed in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Alaska and the San Francisco Bay Area," Ridge added. "Thanks to the recent expansion, we're exploring new markets in California."

Allied Video's Expansion Dream Comes True Thanks to SBA Assistance from U.S. Bank

Allied Video Productions is a full service video production company based in Salem that creates a broad range of promotional, training and fundraising videos and provides turnkey event production services. Back in 2002, three long-time employees—Jeff Hart, Dan Walker and Scott Hossner—bought the business from its previous owner. "At the time, we signed an eight year lease, and we pledged that before the lease was up, we'd purchase our own building," Hossner recalled.

By 2009, it was apparent that a much larger building was necessary. The search for a new space wasn't easy, as Allied needed at least 10,000 square feet with an open floor plan that could be built out. "When we identified a building, we wanted to move quickly," Hossner continued. "Our realtor encouraged us to seek out a Small Business Administration loan. U.S. Bank (which processed 169 SBA loans in Oregon in 2010) was ready to help. Our main contact, Patrick Phillips, mentioned that federal stimulus dollars were available to cover the closing costs, but that we'd have to file our paperwork quickly."

"With Patrick's help, we completed six weeks' worth of paperwork in two and a half weeks, got the stimulus dollars and ended up in a 12,000 square foot building that's allowed us to incorporate everything we had on our wish list—including a screening room, soundstage, studio kitchen and even a pool table!"

Allied Video employees commemorate the company's new 12,000 square foot facility.

Capital Pacific Bank Makes Cedarwood Waldorf Expansion a "SNAP"

From its inception in 1997, Cedarwood Waldorf School in west Portland has received an enthusiastic community response. The school soon outgrew its original space (in a church basement), and by 2000, acquired the historic Neighborhood House in the Lair Hill neighborhood. By 2008, the school was straining at its current space. The adjacent three-story Neighborhood House Annex posed a possible expansion option, but the structure had been condemned and would require considerable renovation—over $2.5 million worth!

About that time, Ben Root, president of Cedarwood's board of directors, connected with Mark Stevenson, president and CEO of Capital Pacific Bank. "I knew that Capital Pacific had a unique understanding of the financial workings of private schools," Root recalled. "At the time, Cedarwood had solid fundamentals as a school, but we needed to firm up some of the institution's business practices to become credit-worthy on the level we needed to finance. Mark and his team worked to align our interests as a school with the bank's interest as a potential lender. Thanks to their guidance over two years, we were able to dramatically improve our business operations. They also facilitated the SNAP (Small Nonprofit Accelerated Program) bond that allowed the project to go forward."

The renovation is slated to be completed by December of 2011. The rejuvenated Annex will feature a performance space, a library and three new classrooms. It will allow Cedarwood Waldorf—which now serves students from K-8—to expand enrollment by 25 percent.

The renovated Neighborhood House Annex will significantly expand Cedarwood Waldorf School's facilities, including the addition of a new kitchen.

$13 MILLION DONATED

200,000 HOURS OF VOLUNTEER TIME

In a single year, Oregon banks give significant time, expertise, and financial support to Oregon nonprofit and community organizations.

Operation HOPE and Bank of the West Spearhead Financial Literacy Efforts

How does a checking account work? What are your responsibilities when you possess a credit card? What's a reasonable amount of money that you should save from each paycheck? For most children, such basic financial questions pose a mystery. For inner-city children, achieving a level of financial literacy can mean the difference between poverty and a chance for a more rewarding life.

Banking on Our Future (BOOF)—a program of Operation HOPE—was developed to provide financial education for youth ages 9-18 at no cost to school districts, with a focus on urban, under-served communities. The program (consisting of five modules, I. Basics of Banking and Financial Services, II. Checking & Savings Accounts, III. The Power of Credit, IV. Basic Investments, and V. Dignity) is taught by volunteer HOPE Corp members who are trained to break down their knowledge of banking and credit into terms that youth can understand and utilize immediately. In addition to financial education, the students are left with a message of empowerment, responsibility, and most important, HOPE.

Since 2000, Bank of the West has partnered with Operation HOPE to advance the aims of BOOF. More than 210 Bank of the West staff members have served as banker-teachers, volunteering nearly 1,100 hours and educating more than 7,300 students in the San Francisco Bay Area, Los Angeles, Denver and Portland. In Portland, Bank of the West has been a major supporter of Operation HOPE since it began operations in Oregon in 2004. The bank provides the nonprofit with complimentary office space in its Northwest Division headquarters. Twenty five Oregon Bank of the West employees have been trained as BOOF presenters, and have volunteered over 250 hours in schools and community groups. Over 20,000 Oregon students have been served by BOOF to date.

Bank of the West also offers students a custodial savings account upon completion of the BOOF program. After six months, Bank of the West will match up to $50 of the student's savings.

"The kids' eyes really light up when you hold up a debit or credit card, as that's something they understand and would like to have," said Bill Williamson, a Bank of the West executive vice president and banker-teacher. "We point out the benefits of credit, but also the responsibilities involved. The goal is that the kids leave our presentation with some financial skills that will help them navigate through life."

Pacific Continental Bank Employees "Give with Heart"

Every bank makes investments in its community by financing small businesses and helping homeowners realize the American Dream. Pacific Continental Bank employees are able to go a step further, thanks to the Giving With Heart program.

"Back in 2003, our Chief Executive Officer—Hal Brown—wanted to empower our employees to volunteer in the communities that we serve," said Amy Delaney, market development officer. "There weren't many, if any programs of this nature in the Eugene community at the time, and though our employees were already doing a great deal of volunteer work, we formalized a program, and Giving with Heart was born. The program has enabled many people who wanted to give back to their communities—but were simply too busy to do so—a chance to be active community members."

Through the Giving with Heart program, Pacific Continental Bank employees are given up to 40 hours a year of paid time-off to volunteer with local nonprofit organizations. The bank also matches employee charitable cash contributions up to $100 for each year. In 2010, 163 Pacific Continental employees donated 6,509 volunteer hours to 191 nonprofit organizations in the markets they serve.

In 2010, one of the activities that Pacific Continental employees enthusiastically supported was Eugene's Relay for Life, which raises money for the American Cancer Society. At Relay events, teams camp out at a local high school, park, or fairground and take turns walking or running around a track or path. Each team is asked to have a representative on the track at all times during the event, as cancer never sleeps; relays are overnight events, up to 24 hours in length. Over several weeks, Pacific Continental employees raised over $5,500 for the American Cancer Society.

"We had a team of 40 employees walking and raising money, but we also had people helping with the accounting and the silent auction," said Delaney. Other nonprofits that have benefited from Pacific Continental's Giving With Heart program include Leukemia Lymphoma Society, Food for Lane County, SMART, Committed Partners for Youth/Big Brothers Big Sisters of Lane County, Loaves & Fishes of Portland, Big Brothers Big Sisters of Portland and Boys and Girls Club of Vancouver. Bank employees also take part in Teach Children to Save Day, where bankers go into local schools in lower-income neighborhoods and teach students the value of saving.

By any measurement, Pacific Continental's Giving With Heart program has made a great positive impact on the communities the bank serves. Delaney credits its success to Hal Brown and other senior managers. "The bank's upper management has been involved every step of the way," she said. "Their leadership provides an excellent example."

Pacific Continental employees support a number of chartiable causes through the Giving with Heart program, including American Cancer Society's "Relay for Life" event.

PremierWest "Stuffs the Bus" to Fight Hunger

Most of us have felt the bite of the recent recession, but the communities of Central Oregon have been especially hard hit. Here, trying times have exacerbated a problem more pressing than declining home values—many people don't have enough to eat. Area food banks have been hard-pressed to meet demand. Recognizing this challenge, PremierWest Bank stepped up to the plate—or should we say, the bus—to help.

"A smaller bank like PremierWest is all about the communities we serve, and employees take this seriously," said Ken Wells, the bank's chief marketing officer. "Last year, our people volunteered over 23,000 hours—an average of more than 40 hours a person. When we're developing community initiatives, we try to create programs that are unique and make a difference. When we learned of the shortages food banks were experiencing in greater Bend, we saw a chance to help."

The Stuff the Bus program was born in 2007 when Combined Communications, a multi-media company based in Bend, brought several parties—including PremierWest Bank—together to battle hunger in Central Oregon. One of the original partners, Mt. Bachelor, donated the use of one of their ski busses. The goal was simple—to fill the bus with food for NeighborImpact, a nonprofit that serves the needs of low-income residents in Crook, Deschutes and Jefferson counties. "The bus has an iconic reputation around Greater Bend," Wells continued. "After all, it's the ski bus. The thought was that if we brought the bus to venues around Central Oregon and announced that it was coming (through Combined Communications' radio stations), we could get people to come down and donate food. PremierWest helps underwrite the project as lead sponsor, but many of our people also get involved, helping other businesses raise awareness among their employees and customers."

The first year, Stuff the Bus collected approximately 6,000 pounds of donated food. In 2010, two busses were deployed, and more than 12,000 pounds of food was collected. Other sponsors include Newport Avenue Market and the Central Oregon RV Dealers Association.

"At the end of the food drive in November, we take both busses to NeighborImpact and have a big unloading event," Wells added. It comes at a time when the need for food is greatest." The food collected through Stuff the Bus is distributed to more than 40 food pantries in the region.

PremierWest Bank, working with Combined Communications, Mt. Bachelor, Newport Avenue Market, and the Central Oregon RV Dealers Association, collected 12,000 pounds of food for Central Oregon food pantries in 2010.

Innovative Wells Fargo Funding Will Bring New Health Services to Portlanders in Need

Central City Concern (CCC) has been providing pathways to self-sufficiency for underprivileged residents in Portland's Old Town/Chinatown neighborhood through active intervention in poverty and homelessness since 1979. The nonprofit agency has developed a comprehensive continuum of affordable housing options integrated with direct social services, including healthcare, recovery and employment. CCC currently has a staff of 500, an annual operating budget of $38 million and serves more than 13,000 individuals annually.

CCC recently had an opportunity to expand its services and mission in Old Town—and at the same time, eliminate a neighborhood blight. An abandoned fast food restaurant adjacent to CCC's Old Town Clinic had become a haven for drug users and prostitutes. CCC envisioned a new structure on the site—the Broadway Recovery Center—an integrated behavioral health services center that would provide primary health care, mental health services, alcohol and drug treatment, and case management to homeless people and local residents in need. CCC turned to Wells Fargo's Community Lending & Investment team for assistance.

"We had worked with Central City Concern before on the Hooper Detoxification Center at Madrona Studios in the Rose Quarter," said Katy Patricelli of Portland, senior vice president for Wells Fargo Community Lending & Investment in Oregon and Washington. "Financing projects like Broadway Recovery Center is a good match for Wells Fargo. Our loans and investments in the community don't fit into boxes. We assess the risks and merits of each deal on its own merit. We look at the people associated with the project first, then assess their credit standing and finally the real estate itself. This philosophy allows us to participate in some very worthwhile projects that some lenders might overlook."

The financing for this project was part of the $61 million Wells Fargo's Community Lending & Investment department provided in this region last year.

The old Burger King restaurant that once occupied the corner of West Burnside and Broadway was demolished in early September 2010 to make way for the Broadway Recovery Center, largely funded by a $31 million commitment from Wells Fargo Community Lending and Investment in the form of a tax-exempt bond (TEB) and new markets tax credit (NMTC) investment. "Thanks to the tax benefits to the purchasers of both the bond and the new market tax credit, CCC gets a lower than market interest rate on the bonds and actually receives equity from the purchaser of the tax credits," Patricelli explained. "Everybody wins."

The 43,922 square foot Broadway Recovery Center is designed by SERA Architects to be LEED Gold certified. It will feature 14 exam rooms, counseling offices, nursing stations and administrative offices. The building will also include structured socialization space with a kitchen, dining area and computer lab on the ground floor. Broadway Recovery Center will have the capacity to accommodate 40,000 patient visits annually. Construction is scheduled to be completed in October 2011, and open soon after.

Lewis & Clark Bankers Don Denim to Aid Children's Center

Customers expecting to find their banker buttoned up in a three-piece suit may be taken aback when they enter a Lewis & Clark Bank branch on the last Friday of the month. Instead of skirts and ties, they'll find bankers in blue jeans. But it's not just "casual Friday"; Lewis & Clark employees don denim to raise money for the Children's Center of Clackamas County.

"From the bank's inception, our leadership has wanted our philanthropic activities to be very local and meaningful to our employees," said Colby Schlicker, Lewis & Clark's marketing communications officer. "If an employee has a passion about a particular cause, we wanted to make sure it was considered. When we were kicking around ideas for a more formalized giving program, one employee—Karen Dunford, a client relations officer—said 'I want to help local kids.' This led us to consider Children's Center of Clackamas County. We were familiar with the organization because they are a client, and certainly understood that they provide a critical service to the community."

The Children's Center of Clackamas County is the sole child abuse assessment center in Clackamas County. Established in 2003, the nonprofit provides crisis intervention for children in need. Many children who come to the center have suffered from sexual abuse, others from physical abuse and neglect. At the assessment center, children receive full medical checkups by doctors who look for signs or symptoms of suspected abuse. Staff also conducts forensic interviews to determine what the children have experienced, so the proper social and medical services can be secured on their behalf.

Lewis & Clark's "denim day" fundraising program was initiated in June 2009. "We designated the last Friday of each month as jeans day," Schlicker continued. "Employees were invited to wear their blue jeans to work so long as they donated at least $5 to a fund that would go to the Children's Center. We put up signs in the bank to let customers know that we were wearing jeans to support the Children's Center. So many employees were participating that the bank got behind it, pledging to match every dollar employees contributed. In the first year, we raised $3,000."

Lewis & Clark and its employees have committed to donating $10,000 to Children's Center of Clackamas County over the next four years. Contributions will go toward the Center's capital campaign to build a new facility, which will be located on property provided by Willamette Falls Hospital campus. Learn more about the center at www.childrenscenter.cc.
